Mr Sherlock Holmes, who was usually very late in the mornings...

I laughed incredulously...

‘I have in my pocket, a manuscript,’...

When Doctor Mortimer had finished reading...

I confess at these words a shudder passed through me.

I knew that seclusion and solitude were very necessary...

Our breakfast table was cleared early...

Sir Henry smiled.

We heard the steps of our visitors descend the stair...

‘Sir Henry Baskerville is upstairs expecting you,’...

Just before dinner two telegrams were handed in.

Sir Henry Baskerville and Doctor Mortimer were ready...

Suddenly we looked down into a cuplike depression...

The fresh beauty of the following morning...

Suddenly my thoughts were interrupted...

A long, low moan, indescribably sad...

Stapleton had abandoned the chase...

From this point onward, I will follow the course of events...

Baskerville Hall, October 15th

What all this meant I could not imagine...

And now I pass onto another thread...

The night air was heavy with the smell of damp...
So far I have been able to quote from the reports...

October 17th

The incidents of the next few days...

For the moment I could proceed no farther...

Over the wide expanse there was no sound...

For a moment or two I sat breathless...

A terrible scream – a prolonged yell...

We stood with bitter hearts...

Holmes and I set off to Baskerville Hall...

I was up betimes in the morning...

Mrs Laura Lyons was in her office...

My nerves thrilled with anticipation...

A hound it was...

The room had been fashioned into a small museum...

And now I come rapidly to the conclusion...

It was the end of November...

It is possible that Stapleton...

Why Study Literature?

The famous Greek philosophers Plato (427–347 BC) and Aristotle (384–322 BC) first clashed when answering this age-old question. Plato felt that literature should be banned. He believed that it was a poor copy of the real world and inflamed people to do stupid and wild things in the manner of its heroes. But Plato’s pupil Aristotle argued that far from corrupting our minds literature actually improves us, enabling us to become more moral by making us feel both pity and fear for its central characters.

The argument today remains more or less the same. Literature’s detractors believe it can lead us astray by making us feel sympathy for evil characters, while literature’s defenders take Aristotle’s view that by feeling for fictional characters we become better people, better at empathising and imagining ourselves in different situations.

As a teacher and lover of literature, I take Aristotle’s view: literature takes us to places that we would never otherwise experience. And reading about murderers doesn’t mean we will imitate them; we may actually learn from their grave errors. Literature affords us the chance to live through other people’s tragedies and triumphs, as a result of which we ourselves may emerge wiser, more thoughtful and happier than before.

In the enveloping mists of desolate Dartmoor, Sherlock Holmes sets out to solve the mystery of The Hound of the Baskervilles, accompanied by the faithful Dr Watson, and the savage murder of the local squire.

‘Footprints?’
‘Footprints.’
‘A man or a woman’s?’
Dr Mortimer looked strangely at us for an instant, and his voice sank almost to a whisper as he answered: ‘Mr Holmes, they were the footprints of a gigantic hound!’
